Facilitated by: Shay O'Brien

Approximately 1 in every 68 children is diagnosed as being on the Autism Spectrum. Yet the behaviors, challenges, and perspectives of these children vary. They see the world differently, handle communication and their thoughts in ways that are arduous for parents and at times extremely frustrating. Their abilities to function in school, home and life can also range anywhere from successful to troublesome.

This hour-long video will describe some of the behaviors and perspectives that children and youth on the spectrum have, from those who might be thought of as “Asperger’s” to those with more several emotional problems related to autism. Strategies for understanding, interacting, and having positive outcomes with these children and youth will be discussed as well.

There will be a Q&A session following the presentation.
