Recantation is a common component in prosecuting cases of child abuse and, too often, the mistaken belief is that recantation signals the end of a successful prosecution. This presentation will focus on ways to analyze the dependency case with an eye toward preventing recantation, investigating reports of recantation if it does occur, and explaining recantation to a judge to rehabilitate your victim's credibility.

Presenter: Mary-Ann Burkhart, Director of the National Center for Prosecution of Child Abuse at the National District Attorney's Association. Their mission is to reduce the number of children victimized and exploited by assisting prosecutors and allied professionals laboring on behalf of victims too small, scared or weak to protect themselves.

AUDIO will be provided through your computer.
